"We never just wait, we are always moving, but there is no reason to change our strategy. We always try to get better when it comes to efficiency and costs."

Hayek regularly stresses that he and his family, the group's controlling shareholders, won't cut jobs or raise prices to satisfy financial markets seeking short-term profits. The share price has fallen by 10% so far this year on top of a 21% drop last year. That compares to 7 and 19% declines respectively at rival Richemont. Swatch trades at a 15% discount to Richemont relative to 12-month forward earnings.

At over 20%, short interest in Swatch's bearer shares is no longer at the peaks seen earlier this year, but still high, IHS Market data shows, reflecting short sellers' expectation that the shares will fall further.

The car battery has been jointly developed by Belenos Clean Power, in which Swatch holds a 51% stake, and the Swiss Federal Institute of Technology in Zurich.

Car batteries are an attractive growth market if numbers of electric vehicles explode to two-thirds of all cars by 2030 in wealthy cities, as several studies predict. But it is also a highly competitive field, where heavyweights like Tesla and Panasonic invest billions to gain scale.
